Chapter 1 by Ryan DeAngelis

Where am I? Is there anyone here? What is going on? I thought I was with Nick, just hanging at his place, but now I'm... nowhere. All I can see is black. Maybe this is a dream. It has to be. Come to think of it, I was pretty tired. This has to be some kind of hyper-realistic dream. I have to pinch myself or something. I have to get up. Okay, I'll close my eyes and then do it. I think they're closed now. It's hard to tell with the same black on the outside. Now, grab my arm, and twist. My forearm is burning. That should've done the trick. I can open now. Nothing still. What is this place? Is there anything? "Hello? Is anyone there? Hello?"

Chapter 2 by SaintSayaka

But the black remains, an endless plane of nothingness. It scares me. Part of me wonders if this is the world on the other side of the mirror. It sounds rather poetic for such a terrifying concept. Nick seems to be gone, as far as I can tell.

So do I wait here for rescue, or do I do a little exploring? It's not like I'll be able to find my way back if I keep moving; everything looks the same. I examine my options carefully.

Chapter 3 by Zane Hector

Looking into nothingness I realize that the ground has a glossy texture at sight, but it feels like cement. I could either stay here or venture off into the nothingness the oddly textured ground. "Dangflabbit"

I look up, what would my dad do? All of a sudden I think about him, a kind man but he could be Taking a step forward, my legs fall into warm water, with a yelp, but this water is not blue, or clear, it's red, a dark scarlet red.

Talking aloud "It almost looks like, no it can't be, but..."
